The Trouble Caused by a Crazy Indias Who Shot a United States Army Officer-A Complete Surprise to All the Partici-pants—Waif of the lightliefield.

P. H. Starr, the half-breed Siowa Indian scout of Pine Ridge agency, was in the Wounded Knee fight, which occurred about seven years ago. M Starr is in Washington pressing claim against the government. has been connected with the govern man seen connected with the govern-ment service for many years. In speaking to a reporter he said:

"I was in the thick of the Wounded Knee fight all unconsciously. I was never more astonished in all my life than when the shooting began, I was not looking for anything of the kind at all."

his clothes, and it seems a miracle to him now, he declares, that he was not and speaks clearly and forcibly,
"I was engaged in the capacity of scout," he added. "It was about 6

o'clock in the morning, or a little after, when the fight began, I was sngaged in dealing out rations to the women and children. Some of the men of the 7th Cavality were about me. Suddenly I heard a gun sired, and instantly the place seemed to be a mass of smoke and flame, and the bullets rattled around like hail, while the shots sounded like stones in a kettle being rattled up together.

The thing occurred in a little ravine. I had my gun close to me when the shooting began, but was so excited, astonished and scared that I ran and forgot altogether about it. The Indians who were around, including men, women and children scattered like chickens when a hawk is after them. To add to the awfulness of the affair, the smoke was blinding and choking.

"The soldiers who were doing the shooting were up on a little hill overlooking the place where the rations were being dead out to the Indians. I was so budly frightened I started to THE away from the started to run away from them, but found that I was running directly to them. Builets were flying all around me, and I could see both the Indians and soldiers who had been close to me falling to who had been close to me falling to one side and then to the other. It was as if I had been in a terrible dream. When I found I was running toward the soldiers who were doing the shooting, instead of away from them, I had present in mind to know that it would not do to turn back, so I ran right in among them. The Gatting gun was cracking like a pack of firecrackers all the time. I turned and looked down into the re-I turned and looked down into the ra-vine, and through the clouds of smoke I could see people mixed up in all sorts with wagons and horses and I could hear the groans of the

"When I had passed the line of solwhen I had passed the line of sol-diers shooting I ran into a log cabin and rolled over and over. I was al-most choked from the gun smoke. Finally I came to myself, and found that one bullet had gone through my coal at the shoulder and another through the collar. I had my coat up around my neck when the shooting commenc-ed. White the shooting began at sunrise, it was all over in that particular vicinity in a baif hour or so, though parties of Indians were chased until sunset. Some of them had gotten six miles away from the place where they were overtaken by the soldiers. All through the day firing could be heard among the hills.

There were many women and children I saw. I picked up a little Indian girl, lying where she had been thrown or fallen, and the child is now living on the Pine Ridge agency. She was about seven months old at that time. Another child was picked up, and is now living with her adopted mother in Baltimore.

"The whole thing was started by a crazy Indian named Sleeker. He brought his gun up to be disarmed like the rest of the Indians, when, instead of giving it up, he stuck it from under his blanket and shot the office in charge.
"'Do you want me to give up my gun?' he asked the officer through the interpreter.

"'Yes, and hand it up quick, too,' was the response.
"With that Sleeker pointed the muzzle

at the officer, fired and killed him.
The soldiers overboking the place where this happened began firing. The ground was frozen, and the bullets glanced, and many were killed in this way. The Indians, with the exception of this man Siecker, had all given up their guns, and I know the shootin was not done by them. Some of the soldiers were so badly frightened thing was going on they did not realize what they were doing. I saw a number of them pulling down the levers of their rifles and firing in the air."
